SHARPS AND FLATS

Several notices appeared in our exchanges after the last election about one Mr. Frank Rockefeller, who also ran in Kansas.

One of those bright, breezy, Kansas gentlemen sat in the lobby of the Palmer House not long ago and talked. His talk interested the scribe and it may interest the reader.

Frank Rockefeller, when he started out in life, gravitated to his celebrated kinsman, John D. Rockefeller, of Cleveland, Ohio. Any man loaded with money, as is John D., draws poor kin as certainly and surely as molasses does a fly. Therefore Frank put it up to John D. about this way. If you will furnish me enough money to start me in business, I will be under lasting obligations and so forth. John D. could not see it. He told his kinsman to enter the employ of the Standard Oil and he would be paid as any other clerk. This line of talk roused Frank up to do something by himself and for himself, and telling John D. to go hence, he followed the advice of Greeley and landed in Kansas. This all occurred many years ago. Possessing the Rockefeller turn of mind to always turn a penny at every opportunity, Frank managed to turn many of them and finally became quite well off for a farmer; for that was his occupation.

In his life in the west he had always been upright and honest and enjoyed the confidence of the people he lived among, so much so that his friends nominated him for the legislature. Coming home he told his wife with elation; but she had other ideas of politics and gave him a hauling over the coals.

When the election finally came off he slipped in home about 11 o'clock. His wife was up waiting for him. "Got beat did you?" she snapped. "Yes mom," he said. "How many?" "Beat by 10 votes." They had a heart to heart talk and he promised her "never again" to run for anything. Time rolled on and his friends nominated him again without his knowing it. They pulled and hauled and finally he yielded and agreed to run. More trouble at home and getting more serious. The election came off and he was beaten five votes. This time he waited until between 1 and 2 o'clock hoping and praying that his wife would be in bed. Down he sat on the front porch and removed his shoes. In his own house he slipped like a burglar. He was half an hour getting to his wife's door. This he opened noiselessly, and there she sat.

"Got beat did you?" she snapped. "Yes mom," he said. "How many?" "Beat by five votes." "Well," she said, "what are you going to do about it?" "Never again," he said, "this is the last."

By this time his wife's temper was aroused. "Yes you are," she declared. "Yes you are. You set right down there Frank, put on those shoes and go right back up town and tell that bunch that you are a candidate for the legislature two years from now and by heck you are going to win." He did as commanded and by heck he did win. Frank Rockefeller was in the legislature seven or eight years.

Last fall he was a candidate for congress and was beaten. On the stump he told the above tale and said he did not expect to be elected this time, but to look out for them four years from this time and if he was beaten, then he would win eight years hence in the third attempt.

The beautiful nights we have been having for sometime disclose to our view that wonderful constellation of the heavens, Lyra.

The Sun calls the attention of the teachers and pupils in the Paducah schools to the fine view obtained at this season of the year of Lyra the harp, Cygnus the swan and Aquila the eagle. These constellations are in plain view early each night between the north star and a point directly west of where you stand. They can best be found by first locating the leaning cross. This cross leans at an angle of 45 degrees toward the north. The top star of this cross, or the head piece, and the outer star of the left arm point almost directly downward to Vega the brightest star of Lyra. The top star or head piece of the cross is Deneb and is in the tail of the swan. Way down to the left of the foot of the cross is the constellation of the eagle. The swan is flying directly toward the eagle. This is pointed at this time that anyone interested in the heavens may take a look at the place for which we are all bound. If the pupils of the Paducah schools were asked the question what is the greatest fact that the intellect of man has ever discovered or brought to light, their answers would be varied and depend entirely upon the view point of each individual or the temperament of each mind.

Some would answer, the application of steam power, or electricity or some one of the hundreds of other applications of the forces of nature. In the mind of one of the greatest astronomers this world has ever produced these answers would all be incorrect. He says that the greatest fact that the intellect of man has ever discovered or brought to light is the well established fact and absolute certainty that our sun and all the planets including our earth and moon, in fact our entire system, is moving through space at the remarkable speed of from ten to 15 miles per second toward the constellation Lyra. For every 24 hours that passes we are nearer the star Vega by nearly one million miles. And another thing that lends to this fact a stupendous significance is this—we have been traveling in this direction and at this speed since the dawn of human history. Where this mad flight started and where it will end is known only to the Creator of the universe. Science is absolutely dumb on this point and can only impress upon the mind of the student the magnitude of the problem.

Now lest some school pupil will fear that in a number of years our sun and planetary system will arrive at Lyra and plunge into that immense star, Vega, and get burned up we will point out that it will take over 500,000 years for us to arrive at the point where Vega now is. By that time Vega will not be there. This flight of our sun and its attendant planets has its counterpart in every other fixed star of the heavens. In place of being fixed they are moving at speeds ranging from 5 to 30 miles per second. Some stars move at a speed of more than 50 miles per second, and there are two stars, of which Arcturus is one, which move at the enormous speed of 200 miles per second. These motions of the fixed stars are called their proper motions.

Now it would seem to a Paducah school child that if the star Arcturus traveled at such speed, in the course of time he would run clear off from everything and never be seen anymore. Rapid as these proper motions are in reality when they are observed they seem slow indeed owing to the enormous distance they are from us. Taking the swiftest moving star, Arcturus, we would have to bring Adam and Eve to life to observe any difference in the configuration of the constellation Bootes of which Arcturus is a member. The apparent difference would be very slight, hardly perceptible to the naked eye.

A week later the King was angry because of an error he had committed, and exclaimed: "I am a fool!" And the fool laughed for he knew that the King was right. —Smart Set.

Wesson Snowdrift Oil

Has that indelible something which constitutes "class" and elegance. As a salad dressing, it gives the most distinctive and superior results. As a shortening, it surpasses lard, and adds to your food a pure, healthful vegetable oil instead of indigestible animal fats. For frying it equals the finest Jersey butter, and cooks thoroughly without charging the article with grease.

No matter how you use Wesson Snowdrift Oil, it contributes a piquancy of flavor, a relish to the appetite, and a beneficial, healthful influence which has never been attained in any household article. It has inspired many imitations, which hope to profit by "over-persuading" the purchaser. Always call especially for Wesson Snowdrift Oil. Made by
